

MLK demands that humans insist as one of the key ideas in the ethics of love that are important to ensure coexistence in the civil rights movement. He fought for many things during a time when there were higher levels of segregation in the country and people were not allowed to have the same chances of opportunities and resources. In a large part of the works he composed, as in the speeches he delivered, he has given integrity significant respect, which means that he opposed any way that would ignore this view since the Black community was struggling to make a mark. Shake for equivalent rights in the nation.

King was motivated by a conviction that nonviolence was a basic component required for the achievement of the civil rights movement. A willingness to accept punishment for violating even an unjust law was a formal part of his methodology of nonviolence. I think he and Gandhi got this privilege regardless of whether they never explained a sensibly reliable case for it.

During the civil rights movement, there were two types of individuals, individuals who persecuted the king and opposed the corrupt things that happened during that period of time. The other type was the general population, white people liked those who did "direct action" and defended themselves.

Therefore, the concept of love is necessary in dealing issues related to civil rights and it is the most appropriate one. King focused on the role of worship as the key to building strong networks and manners through which love can and should be the focal point of our social collaborations. King plans a dream in which we are obliged to move in the direction of making our networks comprehensive. They reflect the broad uniformity estimates and the majority rule system. Through a commitment to others as their establishment, agape offers opportunities to move forward in the direction of shared goals.
