

Accommodationism is a legal translation which upholds that " the government may support or endorse religious establishments as long as it treats all religions equally and does not show preferential treatment." Accommodationists embrace the view that "religious people, and additionally religious substances might be suited by government as to such things as free exercise rights, access to government projects and offices, and religious articulation.

It is good to bear in mind that accommodationists readily agree that science directly contradicts several claims made by a number of religious people If someone believes that the earth is a few thousand years old, say, or that the Grand Canyon was formed during a single flood, they are flatly wrong. You can either be a young earth creationist or someone who accepts the findings of modern science, but not both. The two are utterly, irreducibly incompatible with each other.

Accommodationism generally refers to a public policy in which African Americans are encouraged to acknowledge current racial mastery and segregation to be step by step allowed full citizenship and combination into American culture at some future time. Its best example is Atlanta Bargain, the understanding was that Southern blacks would work and submit to white political standard, while Southern whites ensured that blacks would get essential training and fair treatment in law. Blacks would not concentrate their requests on uniformity, combination, or equity, and Northern whites would reserve dark instructive philanthropies.

Accommodationism is a balancing act, seldom resolved by applying a single doctrine or test. In a pluralist society, such questions will continue to challenge the Court and citizens. Therefore, Accommodationismt will be more appropriate in 21st century America. Accommodationism providing aid to parochial schools, school vouchers that provide tax credit for private/parochial schools, as well as nonsectarian school prayer, as long as these policies apply similarly to every religious foundation and people.
