My Analysis on Dialogue about Cheating

In general, siding with the students has the drawback of creating a relativistic ethic in which collaborating with teaching assistants is permissible in one class but not in another. Drawing a fine line between right and wrong becomes difficult. What's wrong with students exchanging notes as long as they take the exam and write their answers separately if working with teaching assistants is the best thing to do? If the student was deemed liable during a disciplinary hearing, the provided conversation may be had using hypotheticals. When it comes to topics that concern them - and their peers - students have a good sense of fairness and justice, according to this conversation. This sensibility will serve as a springboard for delving deeper into larger ethical issues.

To begin with, according to the conversation, Dean is a moral person. He has the sense of right conduct, virtue, and morals. He values honesty, integrity, and justice. On the other hand, Jan does not value morals and wants to achieve things even if it requires unfair means. Besides that, I would like to be Dean and have his personality. This is because, though Jan has had his way this time, it is not going to go for a long time. Subsequently, only honesty and justice will sustain and will pay off. Apart from that, we need to avoid Jan's character. Such character is bad for society. It promotes unfair means to get things done somehow. If the same attitude exists among many in society, then it will lead to complete chaos. Besides, Dean's character should be promoted. It is the right way to live to promote peace and harmony in society.

Finally, I can say about myself that I have educated greatly to this moral philosophy course. I have learned that I must maintain not only my academic knowledge from all of my completed course but also develops a sense of humane principles and ethics, through the study of philosophy. These personal values can provide me with a better upbringing that will help me cope in the later years. Eventually, it is important to understand that fundamental standards must be instilled in students because they have a direct effect on their academic performance and behavior. Consequently, we must practice what we have studied after education to ethics.
