

Modern Feminism and Violence Against Women

Women's rights can be characterized as supporting women's rights on the impartial basis of equality of gender. The imbalance in gender equity has been a remarkable social concern for a long time, essentially influencing the female sex from one age and then to the next. The problem of violence against women is definitely not another wonder in the world today, given that most communities consider that ladies are inferior to males. However, there is overall physical viciousness, which involves beating wives, which was partially a cultural concept of disciplining defiant wives and rape, while there is more elusive viciousness in marriages such as forced sex and abuse and sensitive ferocity. In addition, the talk culture surrounding viciousness against ladies comes in the form of jokes like rape disguised as unexpected sex, which unreasonably makes ladies sufferers of gender-based violence.

Role of Media

Another important issue faced by women's is the conventional media. The media in the twenty-first century have assumed a remarkable job in spreading generalizations based on gender equivalence. Several cases of TV advertisements, fashion publications, and even daily correspondents have either directly or indirectly spread gender stereotypes. Daily correspondents, for instance, have often been found to over-screen female politicians, while fashion publications have often highlighted female weight issues so that overweight women in the twenty-first century are not seldom regarded as beautiful. This can be resolved through awareness-raising programs and severe penalties and fines to the offenders.

Sexual Abuse

The third issue to be tackled by contemporary feminism is sexual abuse and rape. These cases have been increasing every day in various parts of the world. These instances have risen in various areas of the globe every day. The primary victims were females. Given that the issue is spreading very fast, males along with females also need to play a leading position in combating this immorality that is quite scary to the victims. For a long time, the campaign against sexual violence and rape has been continuous and improvements have been comprehended over the last 3-5 years.

Assistance of Men

In this way, men can associate with ladies to instruct fellow men on how to treat ladies properly, comprehend their emotions and views, and reduce the cycle of violence. This encouragement and support can be done in a display of harmony through workshops and conferences. In addition, as the proverbial adage states, charity begins at home; therefore, men should concentrate on eliminating stereotypical behavior and empowering their wives by sharing home responsibilities impartially. While there is an increase in male feminists, however, these people face difficulties from women and men who do not worth change, as well as an inrush of men who put up a face to support the reason but do not propose what they state in a real meaning.

Work Cited

Susana. "Eight Major Issues Facing Women Today." Retrieved From: <https://www.thoughtco.com/womens-issues-4140420>. June 23, 2019.

Smith and Johnson. How Men Can Become Better Allies to Women: Retrieved from Harvard Business. 2018.